HOUSEHOLD DISCOVERIES - Because a girl dresses showily it to not necessary to suppose that she is extravagant.

B capse she is ex ravagant, it does not follow that she is heartless. Extravagance may be the result of unwise statutog, ignorance of the value of money, social inexperience, un limited income. Show and gayety may exist with heroic traits. Even that which is called orquetry and flatting is often but the development of mental brilliancy, social tact and the amiable desire to please. She who wins all hearts is of en capable of on intense and lifelong devotion. I have in mind a young girl. exceedingly fair, accomplished, graceful, witty, at once admired and beloved-but a little will ul withal, yet always gentle and gracious. If high hats ruled, here soured aloft itself uprivated. Patiers rose, and she wore Ossa on Pelion piled. Women scolded, and the more venerable, even among her male admirers, suggested that she would be ridiculed on the street. She received all remonstrace s with unvarying sweetness, and immediately put a French root on the bat and added a new puff on the panier. I do not mention this admiringly. I wish the tittle micx had had more sense or better taste. But I cannot deny that presently, when trouble came, when her whole fortune was swept away, she went to the front as suave and smiling as if it were but nutting another feather in her cap, she never adjusted a siken fold more dittly or more calmly than she set about self support, and nothing in her days of ease and wealth became her like the d goity, the determination, the self respect and the simple grace of her
